TMAS AHEAD

is only six or seven This year it falls on d that will make for h for millions. Sun-day, normally a holiday, will be Christmas Eve.

Actually, Christmas is exactly six weeks from Monday, the third month, of this month. That means if you have parcels to send any distance you should be getting them in the mail. If they have less than six weeks to reach their destination, and if they are caught up in a rush logjam disappointment could result.

As for your annual shopping—and all of us have some of this to do — it will be easier done now than later. Even if one waits until after Thanksgiving, he is already in the rush, and if things must then be ordered, they may or may not arrive in time.

In all these plans for mailing parcels, and buying presents, we should once again express our sentiments about the over-commercialization of Christmas. In selecting presents, do not attempt to outspend friends or relatives, and do not worry about the cost of your gift.

Best of all, if you can make something that will be suitable as a gift or several, for others, this is perhaps the best way to achieve the real Christmas spirit. Adults should remember that Christmas is a time for children— as far as the mystic and the wonder and and the magic of the day is concerned.

It is a day of spiritual reflection and observance for adults, and it need not be glittery or luxurious.

It is also a time for families to re-unite and for all to give thought to their religious faiths, and the personal philosophy by which they seek to live on earth in peace with their fellow man. It is in other words a time for meditation and rededication and a time for happiness and enjoyment.

Too many Americans— especially housewives— are so worn to a frazzle when Christmas finally arrives, that it becomes an ordeal for them. In this way, we are missing the real spirit, and if you are among those who have sometimes experienced this, begin your preparations now, well ahead of time and enjoy Christmas in 1961!

THE FARMER'S FUTURE

The farmer is being told by the experts that the present trend on the farms of the country will continue. This is a drab forecast for the temples million tillers of the soil.

In short, the present trend is elimination of the farmer — the small, independent farmer. This is a trend which we deplore. Perhaps it is inevitable. In serious discussions of the problem experts point out that this is happening to the small business, to other segments of the population.

This is the price we are paying for mechanization, which is progress. It is the trend toward mass production. Indeed, it is probably an inevitable march toward efficiency and lower unit costs. But even so, we lose something in the march.

The original United States was a land of individuality. The nonconformist was accepted, to a large degree, in most parts of the country. We have no state religion. There was no one political party. There was reward for craftsmen, skill perfected to a high degree and individualism, in general. The small, independent farmer was the backbone of our rural areas.

Must this all go by the boards? Must the independent merchant and small business man be squeezed out? Must the small farmer continue to be dried up? The answer to this question means much to the future composition and character of the nation.

Udall recommends cut in oil imports.
